Falling down movie free

RD.COM Arts and EntertainmentCelebrate are falling curled up with a warm blanket, a cup of warm apple cider, and these classic autumn movies that perfectly capture the season. Emma Kapotes/Rd.com headache holiday trip and return home to spend the season with family and friends on Thanksgiving is perfectly reflected in this noisy comedy watched by Steve Martin and John Candy. Warm yourself up with Martin's laughter and travel misery as Neil Page, an advertising executive desperate to make it home. Candy plays the unexpected and most unwanted companion. Emma Kapotes/Rd.comThis tearjerker featuring Julia Roberts and Susan Sarandon will have you cuddling next to the ones you hold most expensive. As Jackie (Sarandon) struggles with a terminal cancer diagnosis, her ex-husband prepares to remarry a much younger photographer, Isabelle (Roberts). The film follows Jackie's reluctance to accept Isabelle, and its good atmosphere is set against a spectacular backdrop of autumn foliage. Learn more about this season with why Americans say fall, not fall. Emma Kapotes/Rd.com This classic romantic comedy still resonates with the audience years later, with favorite quoting lines and hilarious scenes. Meg Ryan and Billy Crystal turn the age-old dilemma of whether men and women can simply be friends, into a memorable hit movie, with their relationship playing against the backdrop of autumn scenes. It will warm your heart even on the coldest autumn days, enjoying the film that is sure you laugh. Emma Kapotes/Rd.comDenzel Washington brings the high school football team together, and in turn transforms the city into this sports drama set in 1971. Feel the rush back to school, rooting for your favorite high school teams every Friday night and adrenaline-dropping football in this touching picture of acceptance and growth. Emma Kapotes/Rd.comAdmire autumn landscapes the rural coal mining town in this film, which stars a young Jake Gyllenhaal. Based on a 1998 memoir, Rocket Boys, the film tells the story of the dreams of Homer Hickman Jr. (Gyllenhaal). Filmed in Tennessee, the dramatic nature of the film and the beautiful scenery make for an unforgettable fall film. Emma Kapotes/Rd.comToyed by J.K. Rowling's much adored book series, the film adaptation of the first Harry Potter adventure is magical. Whether you're preparing to go to class with Harry Potter and his gang of fellow wizards or watching wizards conjure up spells, moods and stories about this exciting fantasy, you'll want to enjoy the spirit of the fall. True robbers should remember these Harry Potter jokes. Originally published as September 27, 2016 Originally published in Reader's Digest Summer movie-blockbuster season may be over, but that doesn't mean there's nothing left to watch in 2019. In fact, most of the best movies don't even come out until closer to Oscar time, so don't get too attached to the best movie of the year it's quite another. We've put together a list of 19 movies coming out in the last quarter of 2019 that we're excited to see, just curious or sure, will drum up audience buzz if not awards buzz. So let's take a look at what's in store with the rest of the year movies, including new films directed by Ang Lee and Martin Scorsese, as well as a reboot and reboot (actually). (image credit: STXfilms) Hustlers Release Date: September 13, 2019J. Lo, Cardi B, Lizzo, Lily Reinhart (Riverdale) and Constance Wu (Crazy Rich Asians) starring as former strippers who are on the team to take down their wealthy Wall Street clients sounds like a fever-dream premise too good to be true, and yet the Movie Hustlers not only exists, but now. Reaction on social media has already poured in, calling the film JOY and easily one of the best movies so far from STX Entertainment. And the No.1 positive critique in almost every review? This J. Lo delivers an amazing performance, maybe its the best ever. We expect it to be a good movie that 2019 desperately needs. (Image credit: McAll Polai) Goldfinch Release Date: September 13, 2019, based on Donna Tartt's 2014 Pulitzer Prize-winning novel of the same name, Goldfinch tells the story of Theo Decker, a boy whose mother dies at New York's Metropolitan Museum after a terrorist bomb. Theo survives and takes one of his mother's favorite paintings, Goldfinch, running away. Later in life, Theo got involved in crime and forgery of works of art as he continues to try to handle what happened to his mother years ago. Ansel Elgort (Baby Driver, The Fault in Our Stars) plays Decker in the film adaptation, with Nicole Kidman, Finn Wolfhard (Stranger Things) and Sarah Paulson filling the cast. (Image credit: Francois Duhamel) Ad Astra release date: September 20, 2019Swee the last decade has treated us to some truly groundbreaking, out-of-this-world space films, including Gravity, Interstellar, First Man and High Life - and fortunately this trend doesn't slow down in 2019. In Ad Astra, directed by James Gray (We Own the Night, Lost City,) Brad Pitt stars as astronaut Roy McBride, who embarks on an intergalactic journey to find his father, Clifford McBride (Tommy Lee Jones), a scientist who may or may not conduct rogue experiments that can affect all of humanity. Stunning visuals and a sure-to-be impressive score of Max Richter (The Leftovers), not to mention his multiple Venice Film Festival nominations, make this film an early Oscar contender. (Photo: Jana Blaeva) Rambo: The Last Blood Release Date: September 20, 2019Rambo back for one last mission, babe, marking the end of a four-decade action movie franchise starring Sylvester Stallone. In his latest mission, Rambo heads to Mexico to rescue her kidnapped daughter and confronts dangerous Mexican cartels. The latest trailer promises a lot of bloodshed through all kinds of weapons, including mines knives, guns and crossbows, not to mention a heartfelt relief shot for a shot tribute to the previous Rambo movie for the nostalgic (i.e. Dad). (Image credit: Jaap Buitendijk/Focus Features) Downton Abbey Release Date: September 20, 2019The Crawley family was waiting for you. ... Continuing the soapy storylines of the 2010-2015 British TV show of the same name, the Downton Abbey film is sure to deliver more upheaval and scandal on the big screen than the franchise ever has. With the visit of King George V and queen Mary stirring up tensions among the servants and members of the Crawley family who reside in Downton, the drama and fast one-liners Dame Maggie Smith quickly ensue. Oh, how we missed this place. (Image credit: Nico Tavernis) Joker Release Date: October 4, 2019Fresh from winning the Golden Lion (top award) at the Venice Film Festival and getting manure hot takes on social media, the Joker is poised to be the most talked about film of 2019. Joaquin Phoenix, following in the footsteps of fan-favorite Jokers before him - including those who play Heath Ledger (The Dark Knight), Mark Hamill (Batman: Animated Series) and Jack Nicholson (Batman) - plays Arthur Fleck, a washed-up comedian whose vital circumstances and deteriorating mental health turn him into Batman's archnemuseum in the fictional Gotham City. The film's gritty, indie take on the popular villain seems to be Marvel's DC equivalent in Logan (2017), an intimate, Mad Max-esque character exploring the popular X-Man Wolverine. We're excited to see if director Todd Phillips (The Hangover Trilogy) can deliver the first Oscar-winning superhero movie. (image credit: Netflix) El Camino: A Breaking Bad Movie Release Date: October 11, 2019Vince Gilligan, Peter Gould and AMC ventured into April 2013 when it was announced that a series of Breaking Bad prequels called Better Call Saul is in development, but do we really need to see the story of the predecessor of an almost flawless show? Well, now, after four seasons of critics and an audience loved the prequel aired, it's clear that the decision was good. This year, Gilligan and Co. are expanding their Heisenverse even further, with Breaking Bad Netflix's original film, El Camino. This film will go beyond events like The Best Call Saul and Breaking Bad series, showing what happens to Jesse Pinkman after the (probably) death of his partner in crime, drug kingpin Walter White. While little is known about the plot, the film will certainly change the way we perceive the outstanding Breaking Bad series finale - but because the OG Breaking Bad team wrote, produced and directed the film, we're sure it will be just as great. (Image credit: Paramount) Gemini Man Release Date: October 11, 2019This Will Smith vs. CGI de-age Will Smith in this long-hyped futuristic film directed by Ang Lee (Brokeback Mountain). Smith plays Henry Brogan, the killer with a target on his head, and Junior, a cloned version of Brogan trying to lts older himself -- and although the younger is faster and younger, the real Brogan can predict every move of his clone. Fellow hitman Danny Zakarveski (Mary Elizabeth Winstead) joins Brogan in the fight against Junior, while the mysterious characters Baron (Benedict Wong) and Clay Verris (Clive Owen) are also likely to stand in their way. This is a minority report by Mission: Impossible, and even as unsettled as we are with this time a kind of full-length deep video, we are more on board than Smith throwing motorcycles and grenades at ourselves. (Image credit: Jessica Migleau) zombieland: Double Tap Release Date: October 18, 2019Ten years later, we finally get a sequel to the rough, fun-like heck of zombieland. Of course, it probably should have come out, say, seven years ago, or maybe five, but hey, we'll take it now anyway. Tallahassee (Woody Harrelson), Columbus (Jesse Eisenberg), Wichita (Emma Stone) and Little Rock (Abigail Breslin) return to kick more zombie butt and tell survivors to nut or shut up, facing big threats and keeping their dysfunctional little family together. (image credit: Disney) Maleficent: Mistress of Evil Release Date: October 18, 2019Angelina Jolie reprises her role as the evil Maleficent in this follow-up to the 2014 Disney movie about the Sleeping Beauty villain. In Mistress of Evil, Princess Aurora (El Fanning) accepts a marriage proposal from Prince Philip that causes a buzz from Maleficent. You see, Philip's mother plans to separate people and fairies forever, using the wedding as a means to do so, which creates a rift between Aurora and Maleficent. Can these two find peace as a family, or can their different points of view endanger everyone in the country? (Image: Nico Tavernis/Netflix) Irish release date: 1 November 2019 (theatres); November 27, 2019 (Netflix) After breaking with his trademark gangster movies with the thriller Shutter Island, the family film Hugo and Leonardo DiCaprio starring the dramedy Wolf of Wall Street, director Scorsese returns to his roots with the Irishman, a crime drama that follows Frank Sheeran (Robert De Niro), the man who claims to have killed the infamous gangster Jimmy Houghman (With a run time of 210 minutes (it's 3 and a half hours), this film is Scorsese's longest to date for a full half hour, so if you decide to see it during its limited theatrical run before its November 27 Netflix premiere, surely make sure to urinate before settling in. Scorsese and stars De Niro and Pacino are the perfect recipe for Oscar bait, but will this film's indulgent timing of the performance hurt his chances of nominations? We'll see in November. (Image credit: Kerry Brown) Terminator: Dark Destiny Release Date: November 1, 2019Edward Furlong, Linda Hamilton and Arnold Schwarzenegger are back as John Connor, Sarah Connor and the titular Terminator, respectively, in sixth (and last?) Terminator franchise. James Cameron returned to the series after being absent from it as 2: Judgment Day, and it considers Dark Fate a direct sequel to the first two films, with events from the other three taking place in alternate timelines. In Dark Fate, a dangerous new liquid-metal Terminator, played by Gabriel moon (Agents of Marvel S.H.I.E.L.D.), sets off from the future to eradicate the Terminator-human hybrid (Natalia Reyes), and it's up to Connors and OG Terminator to save her and the future of humanity. (Image credit: Jessica Miglio) Dr. Son Release Date: November 8, 2019Goror director Mike Flanagan (Ghosts hill house) welcomes us back to the Overlook Hotel in Dr. Son, which is based on Stephen King's 2013 Shining sequel of the same name. Dr. Son follows an adult Dan Torrance, the son of Jack Torrance with psychic abilities from The Shining, as he fights literally demons (a group of semi-immortal beings called The True Knot), as well as figurative (his alcoholism), while protecting a young girl named Abra Stone, with whom he has a mental connection. The production team behind the film restored the Overlook Hotel using Stanley Kubrick's original drawings, so attention to detail will only be interesting to see. (Image credit: Disney) Lady and Tramp Release Date: November 12, 2019Justin Theroux and Tessa Thompson Dogs in Love in Disney's newest live-action remake, the company's third only this year, after Aladdin (2019) and The Lion King (2019). If you thought talking CGI lions were weird, wait until you see CGI dogs eating spaghetti. However, it should be a good enough family film that will be good to watch around Thanksgiving, and the voice of the actors is just enough reason to give it a chance. It will also be an exclusive Disney movie and one of the few originals available after the launch of the streaming service, so it will be interesting to see how a non-theatre release affects the audience - for better or worse. (Image credit: Nadia Clier) Charlie Angels Release Date: November 15, 2019 Good Morning, Angels! This is Charlie's Angels reboot reboot of the peak 2019 State of the Cinema. But despite the lack of originality, we're still pumped to Kristen Stewart, Naomi Scott and Ella Balinska to star as the new butt-kicking trio of Angels is updated for a more modern era. Elizabeth Banks (Pitch Perfect 2) both wrote and directed a film that has a refreshing change of pace from its male-heavy influence in the past, (really, as such a long-running franchise about women has never been directed at a woman?) Banks also stars as one of three Bosleys, along with Djimon Hounsou (Guardians of the Galaxy) and Patrick Stewart, who shouldn't be misleading at all. But really, just give us high-tech gadgets, a terrific weapon and a decent dose of humor, and we'll be happy. (Image credit: Disney) Frozen 2 Release Date: November 22, 2019Who of us heard (or, admittedly, sang along with) Frozen It Go? (It's stuck in your head now, isn't it? sorry, not sorry.) Six years into the creation of the sequel finally arrives arrives November, with returning voice actors Idina Menzel, Kristen Bell, Josh Gad and Jonathan Groff reprising their roles as Elsa, Anna, Olaf and Kristoff, respectively. Frozen 2 will find our heroes leaving arendelle to save him after learning more about the origins of Elsa's powers. We can also expect a ton of new songs, at least one of which we will definitely hear for years to come. (image credit: Claire Folger) Knives Out Release Date: November 27, 2019Director Rian Johnson's first feature film since the 2017 Split Star Wars: The Last Jedi is a blissfully fun whodunnit with an all-star cast that includes Chris Evans, Jamie Lee Curtis, Toni Collette, Daniel Craig, LaKeith Stanfield, Katherine Langford and Michael Shannon. The film premiered at the Toronto International Film Festival last weekend with glowing reviews that promise a fun-killing mystery with tons of surprises wrapped in a stylish, modern package - and we personally can't wait to see that this director has sleeves when he doesn't owe the legacy of a franchise like Star Wars.December (Image credit: Hiram Garcia)Jumanji: Release Date Next December 13, 2019 Not a tincture sounded like a disaster on paper, but 2017's Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle was surprisingly hilarious and fun thanks to actors Dwayne Scala Johnson, Karen Gillan, Kevin Hart and Jack Black.The sequel, subtitled Next Level, sees the return of that killer cast while adding sure-to-be-big newcomers Danny DeVito, Danny Glover and Danny Glover. The group will have to endure more treacherous locales, more fearful enemies and, again, ourselves in this big-budget follow-up that we can't wait to see. (Image credit: Lucasfilm) Star Wars: Rise of Skywalker Release Date: December 20, 2019This he, fellow Jedi Knights, ninth and final installment in the Skywalker saga. Director J.J. Abrams returns to the multi-year space epic after The Force Awakens in 2015 to link the stories of Anakin Skywalker, Luke Skywalker, Leia Organa and Han Solo, as well as newcomers Rey, Finn, Po and Kylo Ren. The Rise of Skywalker hasn't premiered yet for three months, but countless theories and possible spoilers abound, so be careful where you're hiding online if you're not into this kind of thing. How will Palpatine get back in the fold? Will Rey's parents be further illuminated? And what exactly does Skywalker symbolize in the title of the film? Everything will be revealed in December (whether or not it's a master of mystery, J.J. Abrams we're talking about, after all). Let's hope it's not as divisive as Rian Johnson's previous installment, The Last Jedi. Jedi.
